

Shinta Mani Angkor – Bensley Collection's elegant lobby

An Executive Suite at Treeline Urban Resort

Angkor – Bensley Collection, situated near the river. Evoking the lush opulence of the ancient Khmer Kingdom blended with bright pops of colour and sweeping design details, Shinta Mani Angkor – Bensley Collection (shintamani.com/angkor-bensley-collection; villas from 815 USD including breakfast) features ten villa compounds each with their own private pool, rooftop Sky Garden and indoor/outdoor bathroom. While the surrounds are jaw-dropping – just try to stop staring at the larger-than-life wall adornment that continues from the courtyard into the bedroom – the service is also, unsurprisingly, impeccable thanks to the Bensley Butlers. Each villa is assigned a personal butler for the duration of one's stay to assist in arranging anything and everything one could dream of, from dinner reservations to sprinkling lotus petals in the pool. With the Bensley Butler, guests can spend more time exploring Siem Reap or simply unwinding in your villa and less on logistics.

For another accommodation option that is completely different in style yet still dedicated to the finer details, the newly opened Treeline

Urban Resort (treelinehotels.com; doubles from 215 USD including breakfast) offers a sleek, serene retreat to counterbalance the heat and hecticness of Siem Reap. The passion project of young Cambodian designer Koh Kang, the hotel pays respect to Cambodia's past as well as its natural beauty while looking ahead to the future and welcoming a new wave of discerning travellers who appreciate minimalist design, contemporary installations from local artists and fresh dining options.

All room categories offer spacious sanctuaries in which to unwind after a long day of temple hopping while also keeping sustainability in mind. No trace of single-use plastic can be found in the guestrooms, including the complimentary minibar which features natural nibbles and filtered water all prepared and bottled in-house.

INNOVATIVE DINING

Khmer cuisine often gets overshadowed by its more globally-recognised neighbours of Thailand and Vietnam. Local chefs, however, along with some imported restaurateurs are putting Siem Reap on the map as a surprising gastronomic destination in Asia. A typical three-day stay in town is not nearly enough time to uncover the town's culinary gems.

Chef Siv Pola returned to Siem Reap after studying overseas to open Mie Cafe (secret-retreats.com/miecafe) in a traditional wooden Khmer house originally owned by his grandmother. Combining western cooking techniques with local ingredients and Khmer flavours, his dishes are often simple yet refined fusing together a range of influences, such as a crab chowder made from fresh Mekong crab, coconut cream and emulsion of green peas served with a poached egg. Diners can choose from à la carte dishes for a light meal or select the set tasting menu. Exclusively offering a set menu, Embassy (secret-retreats.com/embassy) is run by two ambitious young chefs affectionately known as the Kimsan Twins, features an all-female team focusing on creating traditional Khmer dishes in an elegant dining atmosphere.

Flavourful dishes, such as crispy lotus root and deep-fried river shrimp soaked in toasted ground rice then tossed with sweet and sour turmeric dressing, change regularly to match available produce. The intimate restaurant found in the King's Road Angkor market complex, is only open for dinner and often fully booked making reservations a must. Other upscale dining venues for an atmospheric meal include Cuisine Wat Damnak (cuisinewatdamnak.com), serving haute Cambodian cuisine created by French Chef Joannes Riviere, and Abacus (restaurantabacus.com) serving fine French cuisine in a lush garden or air-conditioned dining room.

INFLUENTIAL ARTS & CRAFTS

After standing in awe at the craftsmanship of Angkor's carved lintels and apsaras, travellers can then appreciate contemporary works of art throughout Siem Reap.

As the town's only contemporary art gallery, One Eleven Gallery (oneelevengallery.com) is well worth a stop showcasing colourful modern pieces both as part of exhibitions and to purchase. The gallery also serves as the local broker of Siem Reap-based artist Christian Devetter whose vibrant portraits have turned heads around the world. Grab a drink and stay around, taking in the art and meeting the expat crowd that gathers at the gallery every evening.

For a modern take on traditional arts, Theam's House (theamshouse.com) slightly outside of town will have you marvelling at the Cambodian artist Lim Muy Theam's use of colour and Khmer artefact collection. Combining a gallery, museum, studio and boutique, Theam's House is an excellent spot to pick up modern handmade souvenirs and décor while Artisans d'Angkor (artisansdangkor.com) is the place to go for classic Khmer craftsmanship. The social enterprise trains rural Cambodians in traditional Khmer crafts, such as stone and wood carving, lacquerware, gilding, ceramics, weaving, silver plating and more, then provides fair wages and working conditions. Artisans d'Angkor offers free guided tours in its two downtown showrooms and workshops along as well as at the organisation's silk farm workshop just outside of town.

Regardless of how one chooses to spend their time in Siem Reap, it's sure to be a rich experience.

LIFE IN THE FAST LANE

There are regular daily flights between Bangkok and Siem Reap on various carriers including Thai Airways. Citizens from many countries can obtain a Cambodian visa on arrival at Siem Reap International Airport but those staying at Shinta Mani Angkor – Bensley Collection can opt to fast track their arrival bypassing immigration lines as a hotel representative swiftly arranges their visas – the perfect start to a luxurious journey!
