With a headliner like Angkor Wat, Siem Reap doesn't have to try hard to keep visitors coming. But, not content to cruise on the UNESCO star's coattails, a clutch of boutique hotels in the city is daring to innovate.

The new Treeline Urban Resort (treelinehotels.com; doubles from US$170) on the Siem Reap River exemplifies a movement towards chic, local design and more-than-skin-deep sustainability. While another serious, and seriously beautiful, proponent of sustainable hospitality in Siem Reap is the three-year-old Jaya House River Park (jayahouseriverparksiemreap.com; doubles from US$365). Or, track your lighter footprints around the glamorous-camping site of The Beige (the-beige.com; doubles from US$355), which recreates a French-colonial atmosphere in the forested fringes of Svay Chek Commune near Angkor Thom.
